

[e1] Higher penalties for dog dirt are pointless as long as there is not enough personnel to enforce them.

[e2] In individual cases they may indeed act as a deterrent,

[e3] in general, however, a clean environment and the role model effect of others is more likely to motivate the dog owner to pick up the droppings than a potential fine.

